Producing The Champagne of Teas, The Darjeeling Region of West Bengal, India.

As Champagne grapes from the Champagne region of France are exclusively used for French sparkling wines, Darjeeling teas, the Champagne of teas, use only the finest tea leaves from the Darjeeling Region of India. Located on the foothills of Himalayas, these tea gardens are located at altitudes of up to 4000 feet above sea level, where the soil is slightly acidic. A sub-tropical climate with alternating sunny and cloudy days offers the perfect conditions for growing exceptional teas. Because of the relatively cool weather, the bushes do not grow quickly. Darjeeling production is very limited and represents only 3 percent of total tea production in India.
